Russians Test New Bomber Craft May Alter Policy on Arms

By Tad Szulc WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (NYT).

The Soviet Union has test flown a swing-wing supersonic strategic bomber that Western military intelligence specialists believe marks the emergence of an entirely new Soviet air weapons system. Although the Nixon administration has been aware for at least a year-that the Russians have been developing the plane and that prototypes of the first Soviet intercontinental bomber have been tested in flight probably since last March, the Defense Department has maintained secrecy about what it knows of the new plane. But data concerning the new plane obtained from intelligence quarters in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization indicate that the bomber—designed to fly at twice the speed of sound and equipped for low-level penetra-tion of enemy defenses—could become fully operational late in 1973 if Moscow has already made the decision for military produc-

Ky Denies Threatening Coup d'Etat

By Craig R. Whitney SAIGON, Sept. 5 (NYT) .-

Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky acknowledged today that he was the source of information for news articles that said he had threatened to "destroy" President Nguyen Van Thieu in a coup

He insisted, however, that the news articles were false. He dismissed the two-hour conversation with foreign newsmen in which he made the threats as "an informal talk." The reports were attributed over the weekend, at Mr. Ky's insistence; to "sources close to the vice-president." Today, in a communiqué issued by his office, Mr. Ky called the news reports that came from a Friday background session at his villa at Tan Son Nhut air base completely untrue." On Saturday, his press office had denied the reports attributed to sources close to the vice-president, after some Vietnamese newspapers that had not been invited to the briefing had attributed the remarks directly to Mr. Ky. today's communiqué, his of-

Coup Held Unlikely

Concerning the confusion over Vice-President Ky, most foreign observers here do not believe that he has the canability to mount a serious coup d'état against President Thieu. His public retreat and later deprecation of the seriousness of the statements seemed to acknowledge that.

In the talk with the foreign newsmen, including representatives of The New York Times, at his villa last Friday, Mr. Ky made a number of inflammatory statements which could conceivably have landed him in jail if the government dared to move against him and had verified that he indeed made them.

Mr. Ky has always been an impetuous speaker, and some of his advisers have taken great pains since Friday to issue denials -first, that sources close to the vice-president had made, any threats against the president; and second, that Mr. Ky himself had made any—probably to protect him from himself.

There was no way he could deny that the background session

there remained the possibility of claiming that the reports from it were incorrect, and that is the course his office took today. "I am going to destroy Thieu and all his clique," Mr. Ky said during the discussion. "If I were to give my life by destroying Thieu, then I will do it. When I decide to do it, neither Ambas-sador Bunker [U.S. Ambassador Elisworth Bunker] nor the whole American government will be able to stop me."

"In a political fight, I'm not so smart," Mr. Ky told the reporters, but in a military confrontation I am a specialist. I told Bunker in 1967 and 1968 that I was the only man in Vietnam who could make a coup, but I told him I had no intention of it, and he believed me. I told him before I do anything I will let him know five minutes in advance. -You will see-I'll keep my word."

When he was asked when he intended to make his move, Mr. Ky said, "It's up to Mr. Thieu now, to accept or not to accept a (Continued on Page 2, Col. 8)

tion of proposing or supporting an excess-profits tax on business as part of his immediate or post-freeze economic policy, authoritative White House officials have disclosed:

The President regards such a tex as "a poor form of taxation" that would be "counter-productive" in achieving more business efficiency and the cutting of costs, the officials said.

The disclosure by White House officials of the President's stand on an excess-profits tax was evidently made to clear up possible confusion created when two cabinet officers suggested recently that some form of control on profits might have to be considered as part of the "Phase Two" program for restraining wages and prices after the freeze

An excess-profits tax has been proposed by several Democratic members of Congress and by some labor leaders.

Opposing Sides

The two cabinet members were Mr. Stans and Secretary of Labor James D. Hodgson. Neither explicitly supported the excess-profits tax—used in both World War II and the Korean War-as a means of curbing profits.

Two leading Democratic economists, Gardner Ackley and Arthur M. Okun, both former chairmen of the Council of President predicts program will aid U.S. farmers. Page 3.

Economic Advisers, firmly opposed an excess-profits tax in congressional hearings last week. Mr. Ackley called it a "lousy tax." and Mr. Okun said it would encourage wasteful advertising, expense-account living and overfull employment of shrewd accountants. Such a tax imposes a very high rate on all profits above those earned during a base period.

The White House sources said the President was familiar with the disadvantages of the tax and the nearly unanimous view of economists in opposition to it. The post-freeze program, the sources said, would seek to achieve "equity" between the interests of business and labor, but this would not require an excessprofits tax. They noted that some expansion of profits above their present "abnormally low" level would be desirable and good for the economy as a whole. The President, the officials stressed, wants no changes in the three-part tax package he has proposed to Congress: a new business investment-tax credit. repeal of the excise tax on automobiles and acceleration to next Jan. 1 of scheduled personal income-tax reductions. The President regards the package as "simple and clean" and fears that, if an effort were made to make major changes in the basic tax laws, "nothing would get done."

Meany Again Faults Nixon Fiscal Policy

Cites Lack of Plan To Follow Freezes

By Frank C. Porter WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (WP).

—AFL-CIO president George
Meany says his organization would have wholeheartedly supported the wage-price freeze even without controls on profits and interest rates-if President Nixon had simultaneously called a conference of nongovernmental leaders to determine what would happen afterward.

Instead, Mr. Meany argues, the President unilaterally laid out a program that attempts to bribe business while putting the cost of curbing inflation and stimulating recovery on the poor, the workers, federal employees and the cities.

Mr. Meany, 77, made his views known on Thursday at a luncheon with a group of eight reporters. He repeated those views today in a television interview.

As to what follows the freeze, Mr. Meany said that a fair, equitable plan would be a mechanism similar to the War Labor Board of World War II-depending on the voluntary co-operation of management and labor-and the unious would accept it. "Anything else they may come up with will be subject to scrutiny," he said.

No Window Dressing

"The only plan I don't think will work is if they are going to bring management and labor in for some sort of window dressing and leave the power in the Department of Justice or leave it in the hands of Gov. No Outright Dollar Devaluation

U.S. Aide Tells 'Group of Ten' Price of Gold Will Not Rise

By Jonathan C. Randal PARIS, Sept. 5 (WP).-A key sarily the only-"stnner" in the American official yesterday poured cold water on growing demands by the Japanese and Europeans that the United States devalue the dollar outright—by raising the price of gold-in exchange for revaluation of their own currencie Paul A. Volcker, under seure-tary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs, said at a news con-ference that the Nixon administration was still wedded to returning to the $35-an-ounce gold price that was suspended "temporarily" three weeks ago.

"We are not looking for any change in the dollar price, up or down," Mr. Voicker said. His remarks after a two-day meeting of the deputies of the Group of Ten linking the non-Communist world's richest nations-were apparently designed to cut short the push for revaluing gold as part of a compromise solution to the world monetary crisis.

Position Stated Before

In itself Mr. Volcker's stand was scarcely new. He did little more than reiterate the tough line he adopted when he made a brief trip to Europe the day after President Nixon announced his economic and monetary measures, Aug. 15. Since then, a steady stream of institutions, such as the International Monetary Fund, and governments ranging from France to Japan, Italy and West Germany, have called for at least token revaluation of the gold price. They reasoned that the United States, as a major—if not necescrisis, should make a sacrifice by devaluing the dollar in terms of gold rather than continuing to demand that the other countries revalue. U.S. reasons for refusing such action have varied from the "moral" distribution to help major world gold producers, such as the Soviet Union and South Africa, to domestic considera-tions. The U.S. gold price—unchanged since 1934—can be adjusted only by vote of Congress and the conventional Washington wisdom has deemed this a demeaning and dangerous political Tough Decisions Asked

But the consensus from the meeting of experts from the United States, Japan, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Britain and Sweden was that this and other equally tough political decisions were needed to even begin to solve the crisis.
So divided were the experts that the meeting apparently failed to adopt a formal agenda for the full-fledged Group of Ten ministerial meeting to be held in London on Sept. 15 or 16.

In a Common Market effort to reach a common position, two days of intensive monetary discussions will start in Paris to-Inorrow.

The Italian Treasury Minister. Mario Ferrari-Aggradi, will meet the French Finance Minister, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, tomorrow, and the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Anthony Barber, is due here on Tuesday.

Since the Big Four reached agreement on Berlin nearly two weeks ago, Soviet citizens have learned very little about the agreement or its significance. Yesterday's editorial was only the cond substantial Soviet comment on Berlin to appear here in that period.

The Kremlin's cautious handling of the matter has baffled Western observers, especially since the treaty concerns an issue of great importance to the Soviet people, who remain vividly conscious of the effects World War II.

Pravda says the treaty "does not hinder the maintenance of normal economic, cultural and other ties between West Berlin and the Federal Republic of Germany," provided that Bonn has no claim to control West Berlin and "cannot and, in the future, will not administer it."

Referring to Western commentary that the Russians made the major concessions to reach agreement on Berlin, Pravda says:

6 Called on Dividends

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (NYT). The heads of six corporations have been summoned to appear before the Cost of Living Council on Tuesday to explain announced dividend increases above rates in effect before the Aug. 15 freeze. On Friday the council published guidelines suggesting that dividends be held at their rate

Although dividend rates were not covered by President Nixon's wage-price controls, the council said it "takes a dim view of any change in dividend rates that would be inconsistent with the President's program."

Paul W. McCracken, acting chairman of the council, said the guidelines made public yesterday were drawn up to aid efforts by Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans to hold dividend rates at the levels before Aug. 15. The statement suggesting a dividend freeze went to 1,250 corporations.

The six corporation presidents summoned to appear before the council are: Yale A. Blank, Martin Yale Industries, Inc., Chi-cago; Charles L. Coughlin, Briggs-Stratton Corp., Milwaukee; Victor Posner, National Propane Corp., New Hyde Park, Propane Corp., New Hyde Fare, L.I.; Louis Pozez, Volume Shoe Corp., Topeka Kan.; Ernest A Siemssen, Sales Corporation of America, Dresher, Pa., and Max Weitstein, Piorida Telephone Corporation, Ocala, BERLIN, Sept. 5 (UPI).-Mayor Klaus Schuetz told West Berliners today the East-West German talks to implement the Big Four agreement on the city would be difficult.

formance standards. The Backfire is believed by NATO specialists to have been planned as both an aerial launcher for nuclear guided missiles and as a classical "free fall" carrier for hydrogen bombs.

These specialists believe that the Backfire could best be used against targets in Western Furipe and Asia, notably in China, although it would have a highsititude attack capability against the United States if it were based in the Arctic regions or refueled in flight.

The Backfire, NATO experts said, appears to have been designed by $2-year-old Andrei N. Tupoley, the Soviet Union's lead-developed the TU-144 supersonic transport.

This couclusion was drawn because a Backfire prototype was first observed by NATO intelligence in July, 1970, on the ground near the Tupolev aircraft plant as Kazan in central Asia.

The Backfire also has a structural resemblance to the TU-22 medium bomber. Like the TU-22, the Backfire is 131 feet long and is believed to be powered by two Kuznetsov turbofan afterburn engines mounted on the aft fuselage. These engines, each with a 26,880-pound thrust. are also used on the TU-144 supersonic transport.

The Backfire's swing-wing angle is said to be shorter than the angle planned or the United States B-1. Western experts said that only the outer section of the Backfire's wing is movable. On the B-1, the whole wing would be retractable. The advantage of a swing-wing design is that it allows an aircraft to cruise at high altitudes—presumably above 50,000 feet-with less fuel consumption. B-1 Order Reduced The first flight by a B-1 pro-totype is scheduled for the sum-testing for air-worthiness, performance and flight lead is planned for January 1977. To reduce expenditures, the Pentagon has cut the experimental order from seven pro-

mer of 1974, and complete flight

totypes to three. NATO experts believe that the Backfire is now undergoing weapons testing after its successful test flights.

No details are available as to the Backfire's armament, but the presumption is that in addition to standard nuclear bombs it will be equipped with the Soviet equivalent of the U.S. nuclear airto-surface Short Range Attack Missile (SRAM).

The reports of the Backfire's test flights came within days of the conclusion by the International Institute of Strategic Studies in London that both the Strategic United States and the Soviet Union are cutting back on their manned strategic bomber forces while concentrating on intercontinental missiles. Psychologist Urges Drive to Find A Peace Pill for World Leaders

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (WP).—Scientists should begin an intensive campaign to find a pill that will stop wars, the president of the American Psychological Association believes.

The pill would be given to world leaders to prevent a nuclear

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark said in a speech Friday that an intensive research effort was needed on the chemistry of the brain that controls human emotions specifically the anxieties and irrational quests that cause man to fight. The pill could be invented in a few years at a fraction of the cost bard a man on the moon or produce the atom bomb. Dr. Clark said. "These drugs would have to be tested on human before and prime being given to the world leaders from presidents and prime ministers down," he added. Dr. Clark suggested using "com-pulsive criminals" as subjects for the tests.

The key to the plan, he said, was its potential for use by world leaders. "It is a fact," Dr. Clark continued, "that a few men in the leadership positions in the industrialized nations of the world now have the power to determine among them selves, through collaboration or competition, the survival or estinction of human civilization. The rest of the people have mly the hope that their leaders will use their power wisely." At a news conference, he acknowledged that his proposal for biochemical intervention carried the dangers of either reating a world of robots or giving leaders the tools to control

But, he insisted, "I do not believe that it will lead to more tarm than good. I do not believe that we could be in a more tangerous position than we are in now."

Nixon Predicts His Program Will Cut Farmers' Inflation

By Robert B. Semple Jr. WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (NYT). President Nixon returned to the capital yesterday in much the same manner in which he had left it three weeks earlier-pleading for public support for his new economic strategy.

He took the case for his economic policy to what was the largest single gathering he had faced since announcing Aug. 15 his proposals to freeze wages and prices, limit imports, and give tax concessions to individuals and industry. He spoke to 40,000 members of the politically powerful Associated Milk Producers, Inc., and members of their families in Chicago's vast McCormick

"Our new economic policies offer relief," Mr. Nixon said. More than that, these policies promise, for the first time in many years, to achieve a new prosperity for farmers and for all Americans without inflation

Mr. Nixon flew to Chicago for a speech Friday night after a stop in Dayton, Ohio, on his way back to the White House from his vacation retreat in San Clemente. Calif.

Both in Chicago and in Dayton, where he helped dedicate the United States Air Force Museum at Wright-Patterson Field, Mr. Nixon touched briefly upon the challenges and difficulties facing the United States as it moves out of the war in Vietnam toward what he called "a new generation of peace." Among these, he said, was inreasing economic competition from other nations, both friend and foe. In a brief defense of those elements of his new economic program designed to reduce imports and increase exports. Mr. Nixon said, "We should welcome competition, but we must insist that that competition be fair."

This comment won loud applause in both cities.

Mr. Nixon received one of his biggest hands of the evening in Chicago when he recalled that the first thing he wanted when he got back from World War II was a glass of "good fresh milk."

The speech represented Mr. Nixon's emergence not only from his vacation retreat, which he left Friday morning aboard his airplane, the Spirit of 76, but also from three weeks of studied idential silence on domestic and foreign issues.

Race Unrelated to Intelligence, Two U.S. Psychologists Find

By Stuart Auerbach

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (WP). -Two psychologists, working independently, reported Friday that differences in intelligence and achievement-test scores between whites and other racial groups are due to social and economic factors.

Their findings clash with the controversial conclusions of California psychologist Dr. Arthur R. Jenson and Nobel Prize-winning physicist Dr. William Shockley, that blacks are genetically inferior to whites.

"These papers refute Shockley and Jenson," said Dr. Edward J. Casavantes, a member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Right, who headed a panel discussion at the annual meeting here of the American Psychological Association.

"These will give ammunition to the other side [against Shockand Jenson] for the first

The studies were different, Mrs. Mercer looked at intelligence tests while Dr. Mayeske studied achievement tests. Both used different methods, and neither knew of the other's studies. But at the end, they both reached the same conclusions: Race and ethnic background have nothing to do with intelligence or scholastic

"This new evidence from two separate and independent studies is the strongest over presented documenting that environmental and social factors affect test scores," said Dr. Casavantes. "Many social scientists have always felt there were no basic intelligence differences between racial and ethnic groups, but until now there has been an absence of scientific data," he said. "I was quite excited to find that Dr. Mayeske reached identical findings by completely dif-ferent methods," said Mrs. Mer-

Coleman, who concluded that minority-group children had suffered so much cultural deprivation by the time they reached school that no amount of educa-

After S. Africa Trip By James Goldsborough

PARIS, Sept. 5 (IHT).-Rep. Charles Diggs ir., the black American congressman who was made an "honorary white man" so he could visit South Africa, said here that both the U.S. govern-ment and U.S. industry in South Africa were practicing apartheid.

Rep. Diggs, D., Mich., has just returned from South Africa with the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa, which was studying the role of U.S. business firms there. In an interview this weekend he was considerably harder on U.S. complicity in the apartheid system than on the South Africans' resistance to change.

"I don't think the South African government would be as resistant as some people think," he said. He said there were a lot of pressures that could be brought by the U.S. government to promote change, but that Washington has taken the attitude that it isn't going to move any farther than it has to."

He criticized Ford, General Motors and Chrysler as well as all the major U.S. banks operating in South Africa for following strict apartheid rules in their policies. All-White Embassy

But, he asked, "what can private enterprise do? They look at our embassy and they don't see any black faces—they see our own embassy practicing apartheid. I think we ought to assign some black people to our embassy. Maybe that would put some backbone into private enterprise."

Asked if he was advocating that U.S. firms and the U.S. government defy South African laws and customs. Rep. Diggs said he thought there was much that could be done within the law-"Would the South Africans send policeman in if whites and blacks were using the same lavatories?" But he also said there were reasons to defy the law.

"If these people [Americans] can't operate as we do back home. then they should get out of there. This is a question of human

Rep. Diggs said the State De-partment had been "agonizing" over whether to assign a black diplomat to South Africa. "At first they wanted to put in a high-level person," he said, "Butthat idea-probably with White House persuasion—has been eroded now to the idea of a low-

Rep. Diggs said he met with no South African government of-ficials while on his visit. He said he felt the visit had been successful, because there are "a lot of external pressures that can be Afrikaners." He said that in meeting with various white groups he came to the conclusion that the whites see the "inevitability of a confrontation if there is no change. They see that it is in their own selfinterest even the Afrikaners. Rep. Diggs said he had no criticism to make of Malawi President Hastings Banda's trip last month to South Africa, breaking the long black African tradition of boycotting Pretoria. "Banda has 90,000 miners working in South Africa," said Rep. Diggs, "and I only hope he got something out of it for them." Rep. Diggs, 49, is a 16-year veteran of the House. In addition to being chairman of the African Affairs subcommittee, he is chairman of the House black caucus, which was formed this year to represent interests of the 12 black members of the House. He is the son of Charles Diggs sr., who was Michigan's first black congressman,

On Eve of Lynch-Heath Summit

Blasts in Ulster Kill 3 More; U.K. Cool to Bid for UN Unit

BELFAST, Sept. 5.—There were three deaths during widespread violence in Northern Ireland over the weekend, which also brought two peace proposals

—a suggestion by the Irish Republic's premier for a United Nations border patrol to choke off the smuggling of arms from his nation into Ulster, and a fivepoint program offered by the illegal Irish Republican Army.

The weekend's three deaths brought to '98 the number of Ulster fatalities since the current wave of violence began in August, 1969. The total of deaths for this year reached 66. Premier Jack Lynch of the Irish Republic made his proposal for a UN peace patrol on the eve of his summit talks with British Prime Minister Edward Heath, talks opening tomorrow at Chequers, Mr. Heath's country estate. The British government officially remained silent on the Lynch proposal but privately London fficials reject it. Mr. Lynch said that his republic's border patrols have been active and effective in cutting the arms-smuggling, and implied that they can do no more. He asked that Britain and his republic request a UN control on both sides of the often-unmarked border. Such a unit, he said, "would help establish the facts and so serve to expose or prevent activities prejudicial to peace."

In London, it seemed certain that, instead of accepting Mr. Lynch's idea, Mr. Heath would demand increased Irish Republic efforts to cut off the weapons flow and the infiltration by the outlawed Irish Republican Army, which wants to unite the republi and Ulster.

No Deals With Murderers' The IRA's peace plan suffered a rebuff, too. A spokesman for the Northern Ireland government said: "We do not do deals with murderers." The IRA, vowing to drop military operations if the British government accepted its proposals by midnight Wednesday, and to continue its "guerrilla warfare" if London rejected them. asked an end of British violence "against the Irish people," abolition of the Northern Irish provincial parliament, non-interference with a free election of a new regional parliament "as a first step toward a new governmental structure for the 32 counties (of all Ireland)," release of all Irish political prisoners and compensation for victims of "direct and indirect - British vio-

Bormann, Hitler Aide, Called a Spy for Russia

By Henry Raymont NEW YORK, Sept. 5 (NYT) .-A manuscript described as the memoirs of Gen. Reinhard Gehlen, former head of the West German intelligence service, asserts that Martin Bormann, Hitler's top lieutenant, was a Soviet agent during World War II.
It also says that after the war Bormann became an adviser on German policy in the Soviet Union and that he died there less than three cars ago. These assertions about the Nazi leader, who was last seen leaving Hitler's bunker in April, 1945, are centained in a forthcoming book which Gen. Gehlen is said to have written since his retirement in 1968. The book is reported to be commanding offers approaching

The memoirs discount previous accounts of Bormann's fate, which presumed him either to have died outside Hitler's bunker in Berlin or to be hiding in South America. In fact, the memoirs say, as the Russians closed in on the bunker, the Nazi leader crossed their lines and gained sanctuary in the So viet Union. The information is attributed to a series of "unimpeachable" reports, presumably from Gen. Gehlen's agents in Russia, the last of which, reporting the death, reached him in ficially listed as dead in 1954, but 10 years later the West German government posted a $25,000 reward for his capture.

Commenting on these Gehlen reports, Prof. Merle Fainsod, a Harvard historian and author of "How Russia Is Ruled," said yes-"There is no information available among Russian scholars, so far as I know, to support or deny the presence of Bormann in the Soviet Union."

The account of Bormann's double role is one of many details of East-West Intrigue in the reminiscences of Gen. Gehlen, who—after being chief intelligence officer of the Wehrmacht on the Russian front—was recruited by the Central Intelligence Agency eventually rose to director of the Bundes Nachrichten-Dienst, West Germany's secret

The existence of the memoirsand negotiations for their sales by a small West German publishing house—became known here during the last few days.

An announcement is expected next week that bids for the world rights to the manuscript outside Germany have been made by the World Publiship Co., a subsidiary of the Times Mirror Co. of Los Angeles, and Avon Books, a paperback publisher owned by the Hearst Corp. The publishing house of William Collins of London is known to have offered $100,000 for the British rights.

Sale Offered According to information assembled from publishers here and in West Germany, the Gehlen memoirs were first offered for sale early this year by Volker Hansen, director of Hase & Koehler, a small publishing house in Mainz known for books on military subjects. Mr. Hansen, whose father was a German intelligence officer during World War II, said he held power of attorney for Gen. Gehlen.

Over the last three months several American and British publishers have gone to Mainz, where they were shown up to three chapters of the 12-chapter manuscript. Requests to visit Gen. Gehlen at his home in Bavaria were turned down on the ground that he wished to remain secluded during the negotiations but that he intended to make public appearances to promote the book after its publication.

Publishing sources, both here and in West Germany, assert that they have confirmed the reliability of the material through persons close to the intelligence services of both countries.

Ford of GOP Warns Congress On Arms Cuts

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 5 (NYT). —Rep. Gerald R. Ford, the House minority leader, warned Congress last night that any curtailment of U.S. defense expenditures as the involvement in Vietnam nears an end will thwart the nation's effort to keep pace with the Soviet Union's military advances. The Michigan Republican cautioned Congress not to suc-cumb to the "disllusionment and war-weariness of the present moment" by cutting military spending.

"I am concerned that the Congress will so restrict future funds and support for a realistic defense that the Soviet momentum, which has moved inexorably forward on all fronts while we were bogged down in Southeast Asia, will gain such a lead that we can never catch up," Rep. Ford said in remarks before the national convention of the Zionist Organization of America

Merger Asked By Northwest And National

Fourth Linkup Plan Given CAB Recently

By Clare M. Reckert NEW YORK, Sept. 5 (NYT). Northwest Airlines, Inc., and National Airlines. Inc., have reached an agreement in principle to merge in an exchange of stock valued at more than $225 million.

The merger proposal for the two airlines, ranking about seventh (National) and ninth (Northwest) in the industry, is the fourth air merger plan sub-mitted to the Civil Aeronautics Board for approval in recent months. Financial distress of the nation's airlines has been the prime reason for seeking consoli-

American Afriines and Western Air Lines, the second and sixth largest domestic carriers, respectively, is the biggest of the merger proposals pending before the CAB. The Transportation Department is supporting this and the two others—Delta-Northeast Allegheny-Mohawk. The Justice Department said the merger would be anti-competitive in itself and would promote other mergers.

Under the proposed terms, one share of National would be exchanged for 0.85 of a share of Northwest, The latter closed Friday at 32 3/4 and National closed at 26 5/8.

Northwest Airlines serves the Northwest of the United States, the West Coast, Alaska and the Far East.

National's principal routes are along the East Coast to Florida and Florida to California, and a Miami-London flight.

After the Ball Is Over on the Riviera

By Hebe Dorsey CAP D'ANTIBES, Sept. 5 (IHT). -At this point of the Riviera season, when one could almost count the black-tied bodies, the question was: "Who needs another

The last memorable bash was iven at Beaulieu's La Réserve by South African magnate John Schlesinger, who has a heart of gold and pockets full of money. He wanted to have a little party of his close friends-vou know. like a hundred or so. Simple too, with second beloings of Iranian caviar, filet en croute and fire-

"I've always loved fireworks." he said, "since childhood." Who said all men were children? But anyhow, Rita (his wife) looked lovely with her red hair pulled to one side, and those sapphires, no question about it, do help a woman get through life.

Then Came Raffles

So, just as everyone, you'd think, might pack and go, then came the Raffles ball. Held Friday at the Hôtel du Cap-which, to quote the priceless press release, was the backdrop of F. Fitzgerald's chef d'oeuvre, "Tender is the Night," and a hangout for the elite for more than a century. The truth about that ball is that it did not even pretend to be anything else but a good, honest promotion job for the Hôtel du Cap and Earl Blackwell's New York Chib, Raffles. But Mr. Blackwell is such a nice man that one does not mind that he is a P. R.

So, before you know it, he had everybody on the Riviera dying to come to the ball and even chartered a plane from New York to bring in a few more friends. The party kept building up for weeks. The theme of the ball was red and white, the Monegasque colors, with the hope that Prince Rainier and Princess Grace would attend. They declined. Princess Grace, a wise woman all right, said she had to put her children back to school

As this was a ball, there were no less than 24 pre-dinner parties. One had a choice of sailing in on Prince and Princess Troubetskoy's dazzling yacht, have dinner at Rosemary Kanzler's Chateau St. Jean or decide between two cosmetics tycoons: Estée Lauder and Charles Revson (Revion), Mr. Revson had the largest yacht in the harbor, but Mrs. Lauder netted the choicest table with the Begum, Florence Gould, Princesse de Polignac and the only mild sensation of the evening: Liza ers from East and West.

Minelli on the arm of Baron de Rede. Then Charlotte Boissevain, a sweet old lady who owns the house where Aly Khan met Rita Hayworth, had the nicest small party and the best lemon pie

The best part of the evening was to watch the red and white crowd stream down a mile-long venue between a row of drum majorettes. Some women did work on their costumes but Mrs. William Levitt won the prize. She wore a white satin eyepatch and rubies. Pive thousand red and white carnations put together in neatly stiff bouquets were supposed to help carry the ball's heme, but they mainly helped the Riviera's flower industry

By now, need I tell you, that party never got off the ground. No sooner had all those chic people arrived that they looked with that funny, "What are we doing here?" listless look. The orchestra played the most discouraging oum-pah-pah music and even the "see-and-be-seen" game quickly wore off.

So, on this low-keyed office party note, the otherwise brilliant Riviera ball game closed down. Meanwhile, the choicest piece of Controversy still surrounds an amendment he successfully sponsored to the foreign aid bill in 1962, but it has withstood challenge since then. The amendment provides that the United States automatically deny aid of any kind to any foreign country that expropriates property or equity of a U.S. citzen holding valid contracts, unless the foreign country takes appropriate steps within six months toward adequate com-

Materials for a Crisis

Saigon that the interview-- not for attribution" and subsequent disavowals have become something of a rule. Consequently, whether General Ky threatened a coup or General Minh was offered financial aid by the United States for a political campaign are obscured by a cloud of dementis. What is indisputable, however, is that the materials for a crisis of major proportions are being accumulated in South Vietnam, with obvious implications of trouble for American policy.

There seems little reason to doubt that a substantial number of South Vietnamese endorse the idea of a strong president in these times of trouble, and regard General Thieu (as he regards himself) as the man. The recent elections for the lower house of the Saigon legislature give evidence of that and, in any case, it is the normal reaction of the people in the threes of war.

But there are undoubtedly others political Buddhists, students, soldiers-who consider President Thieu's solitary promenade back into office as a mockery of democratic forms and an obstacle to peace. This sentiment is strong enough not only to cast a shadow over the forthcoming elections but to pose a threat to the conduct of the war and the government by the Thieu regime.

The world has had enough experience of the activities of aggrieved minorities to take the theory of majority rule with more than one grain of salt. It is quite possible that President Thieu could have been re-elected in any reasonably fair poll in South Vietnam. But he will never be able to prove that now; whatever majority he accumulates will be suspect, and the minorities, whether advocates of peaceful settlement or supporters of other personalities, will be backed by the weakness of Thieu's moral position as well as the strength of their own convictions.

What does this portend for the practical ends of the American Vietnamization program? Will the ARVN forces fight as well under a government whose basis has been so bitterly and justifiably assailed as under one chosen in a respectably fair contest? Will the government be driven, as Diem's was, to such concentration on its own survival as to be ineffective in war and repressive in government? Will the threat of a coup hover over it constantly?

Such possibilities are plainly evident in the present posture of affairs in Saigon. They are at least as important to Washington as the blow to its political aims as a result of President Thieu's intransigence. Moreover, the options open to the United States are strictly limited. Now that the effort to give Thieu some real opposition has failed, there can be little promise in attempts either to bolster him with American arms against the adherents of Ky and Minh (to say nothing of the Viet Cong and their northern allies) or to back an effort to oust the president. Commitments of such sert would never be accepted by the American people. Withdrawal must continue, even if Vietnamization is wrecked on General Thier's stubbornness.

The Heath-Lynch Talks

Prime Minister Edward Heath's decision to advance by six weeks the timetable of his scheduled talks with Premier John Lynch of the Irish Republic tacitly acknowledges that he cannot stand pat on Britain's policy in Ulster. Up to new that policy has consisted of deploying British troops to maintain order while prodding the government of Northern Ireland to reform itself.

The reforms in housing, police, local administration and legislative apportionment, some of them already in effect and others under active consideration, are intended to reconcile the Catholic minority-about onethird of Ulster's 1.5 million people-to the Protestant-controlled government. If put into effect two or three years ago, these reforms would almost certainly have achieved their political purpose. But the swiftly running tides of emotion appear to have swept past them. At the same time, the internment without trial last month of several hundred suspected members of the Irish Republican Army has only intensified IRA violence.

Under these circumstances, the British government has to make a broader, bolder effort to find a political settlement. The road to that settlement inevitably leads to Dublin. Only if there is a political arrangement which the Dublin government is prepared to endorse and, in effect, to guarantee, are the Catholics in the north going to calm down and permit a new status quo to evolve. That is why Mr. Heath has wisely stopped complaining that Mr. Lynch is trying "to interfere in the affairs of the United Kingdom," and has instead invited him to Chequers for a conference today.

The IRA militants want nothing less than the immediate and complete reunification of northern and southern Ireland. But the majority of Catholics in the north, while sharing that dream, realize that it can be achieved, if at all, only by savage fighting with the recalcitrant Protestants. These moderate Catholics may be prepared to accept some provisional, half-way house in which the inherent unity of Ireland received symbolic recognition but the north retained considerable autonomy. Once moderate opinion is satisfied, the IRA militants can rather quickly be isolated.

In Mr. Lynch, Prime Minister Heath has the most reasonable partner he can hope to have in finding his way out of the Irish maze. Unless negotiations on fundamental issues are begun now, violent events may erode Mr. Lynch's political position in Dublin as violence has already destroyed the viability of Catholic and Protestant moderates in the north.

The Vietnamese Elections

The legislative elections have caused no upheaval on the political scene in South Vietnam. The government, as expected, will be supported by a strong majority in the Assembly. The "hard" opposition has complained about the many obstacles during the campaign and the balloting; it has scored a few points where official pressures were necessarily less strong—in the cities—and also in a few of its traditional strongholds. in particular in the Hué area, where the Buddhists never have supported the Saigon regime. The PRG, for one, had denounced the "electoral fraud," but invited its militants to favor candidates hostile to President Thieu if they were compelled to vote. The importance of these elections is quite relative. A conversation between President Thieu and U.S. Ambassador Bunker can be of more consequence than long working sessions in the Assembly.

-From Le Monde (Paris). * * *

The results of the elections to South Vietnam's lower house contain a warning to President Thieu.

The An Quang (militant Buddhist faction) showed the strength of their anti-government and anti-war ticket by the extent of their success in the first time of contesting lower house elections. They can command a sizable following among the majority of South Vietnamese. In eliminating his rivals for the presidential election in October. President Thieu has left himself exposed.

The withdrawals of Gen. Minh and Vice-President Ky are unlikely to increase or diminish them as focuses of opposition. Thieu is now left alone with his military and administrative power base-and the United

Above all, Thieu will need funds to keep the army and countrywide administration up to bearing the increasing Vietnamese burdens of pacification and fighting the war. Congress could well try to cut back the $565 million aid demanded for the coming year. -From the Guardian (London).

The Irish Problem

The task of isolating and suppressing aimed subversives (on both sides of the border) and of instituting a more stable political order in Northern Ireland becomes virtually impossible if common cooperation and even common understanding is absent between the governments of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland, Mr. Lynch's visit to Chequers next week is therefore most welcome. Hopes that a personal meeting between heads of government will smooth away complex and intractable disputes between their respective states are often doomed to disappointment. But the normally good relations between the United Kingdom and Ireland have not rotted so far as that. There can be reasonable confidence -and there are certainly strong wishesthat the meeting of the two prime ministers will restore good working relations.

SAMARA—Thousands of children are dying from the terrible famine which is slowly swallowing up Russia. Many of the children have been abandoned by their parents on city streets, and now are jammed into small refugee homes where 400 live in houses meant for 40. The children are diseased and prematurely old. They live on soup and herring day after day. The great majority are dying and there is no hope in sight.

Democrats and Nixon's Economics

WASHINGTON-From the standpoint of the startled Democrats, the President's "new economic program" might just s well be entitled the Nixon election program.

Even after he reversed himself on his China policy, Demo-crats remained confident that Mr. Nixon would stick with conservative economic orthodoxy despite the continued rise in prices and unemployment. He has now shown that he is not to be confused with Herbert Hoover. When policies visibly fail, he lettisons them.

President Nixon's re-election prospects now depend largely on the success of his new economic policies and on long-term popular acceptance of them. As leading Democratic economists have pointed out, these policies will probably not stimulate the economy sufficiently. The increased tariff on foreign automobiles and the abolition of the automobile excise tax should greatly stimulate the motor industry as well as in-dustries—steel, rubber, glass allied to it. But, important though it is, a boom in Detroit cannot reflate the whole company.

The small cut in individual income taxes which Mr. Nixon wants next year will be substantially offset in the lower brackets by the rise in the payroll deduction for Social Security.

Hoping for the Worst

with reasonable confidence to fighting a political campaign next year with unemployment about as bad as it is now.

But politicians are rarely so cold-blooded. The competitive pressures to produce a distinctive alternative to the Nixon program will impel the Democrats to push for much more generous tax relief for the lower brackets and for higher federal spending. As a result, the Democrats will in-advertently help Mr. Nixon by enabling him to go to the country in the fall of 1972 with the economy considerably more pres-perous. That will make the task of any Democratic presidential candidate much harder.

It is easier, however, to revive an economy than it is to prevent inflation at the same time. If he is to avoid the political damage of rapidly rising prices, President Nixon has to follow the present temporary wage-price freeze with some form of permanent and effective economic controls. Members of the cabinet are already making overtures to the labor unions to persuade them to become partners with government and industry in a wage-price con-

Some Democratic politicians are worried that Mr. Nixon may succced in striking a bargain on controis with AFL-CIO president George Meany. Indeed, a successful Nixon summit meeting with big labor concerns them a good deal more than any presidential summit-meeting with Chinese leaders in Peking. A deal with organized labor which worked would defuse almost all economic a political plus for Mr. Nixon in November, 1972. The political implications of these events should be plain to the Democrats, but many party leaders show no sign of beeding them. President Nixon, whose political position had been slowly but steadily weakening, has now recouped and has to be regarded as the probable winner of next year's election. The economic issues still offer the Democrats their best opening, but this opportunity

These factors logically suggest that the Democrats ought to strive for party unity and conserve their money. But no sooner does Sen. Harold Rughes of Iowa, who never had much of a chance, decide to withdraw as a presidential candidate, than Sen. William Proxmire of Wisconsin, who has none at all, decides to enter. After the policy upheavals of the summer, why do leading Democrats con-tinue to act as if Mr. Nixon is a sure loser or could be defeated on rare experience. The Soviet government has arranged things so that the British. French and Japanese airlines can make the entire journey in a 10-mile-wide corridor that avoids every community except Moscow.

Out of Tokyo, the corridor goes 600 miles north over the Sea of Japan and then turns due west across the Soviet coast south of a place called Svetlaia, far north of Vladivostok.

On Good Authority

You fly at 36,000 feet, which in these latitudes usually assures a cloud cover between you and the ground, but we have it on the authority of Capt. Tom Dobson, who pioneered this route for BOAC, that we crossed the Alma River two hours out of Tokyo, the Lena River four hours out, the Ob River seven and a half hours out, reaching the Ural Mountains half an hour later and Moscow precisely on time, 10 hours from takeoff.

The sensible thing for a reporter to do is to break the monotony at this point and get a little rest and pick up a little information, if possible, but if you have been in China discussing world politics there with the Chinese leaders, getting permission even to stop in the Soviet capital, let alone interview the resident leaders, is a somewhat complicated process. Soviet and Chinese officials are being particularly beastly to one another in print these days. In Peking they complain that Moscow's propaganda is more anti-Chinese than anti-American and that it is often personally viilainous. Soviet officials are not only accused of departing from the true Marxist-Leninist line, of social revisionism and even of connivance with Washington in a super-power plot to run the world, but of threatening the security of China with a million men on the Chinese northern

Still, the vehemence of this propaganda war between Moscow and Peking is a puzzle. Even in Peking, where courtesy is regarded as a virtue, it was not possible to get access to the men who were directing or writing the mystifying clarifications of Chinese policy.

In this field, the West is particularly different from the East. President Nixon has shown a willingness to change and even forget his old policies and con-centrate on the future, but the Communists in Peking and Moscow can't leave the past alone.

The Austrian Treaty

Berlin's Ancestor

By Don Cook

PERLIN.—The central fact of to extradite former contracts and was criminals from ment on Berlin is that the Western Allies have managed to extract concessions and arrange-ments from the Soviet Union to improve the future outlook for the city which seemed almost impossible to hope for when the negotiation opened nearly 18 months ago. How has this become possible? To explain at least in part, this is a good moment to tell the story behind the story of an earlier similar success for U.S. diplomacy 16 years ago—the Austrian State Treaty.

Like Berlin, the Austrian question had been a matter of interminable East-West wrangling and cold war power plays. There had been well over 100 meetings the Big Four high commissioners in Vienna on an Austrian treaty draft, but on almost every article but the preamble it had been a three-year story of stalemate. Then, suddenly, in March of 1955, the Kremlin declared that the time was new ripe for a settlement of the Austrian question. The reason for the sudden switch, apparently, was that the Russians, with Nikita Khrushchev beginning his ascent to full power, hadly wanted a Big Four summit conference. But U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles disliked the whole idea of a summit and had made an Austrian treaty a precondition of such a meeting.

Today, the Russians badly want a European security conference. and the NATO powers have made a Berlin agreement a precondi-

Dulles Surprised

In any case, when the Russians made their move on Austriz in 1955, Dulles was caught completely by surprise. Not that he was displeased with the prospects of a breakthrough on the Austrian treaty, but he still did not take to summitry and he simply never expected, in the war atmosphere of the time, that the Russians would give up a key position in Europe. I was dispatched to Vienna to cover the final stages of the treaty negotiation. Naturally, I arranged as first port of call to see the American high commissioner, the capable, softspoken, tough-minded professional negotiator. Llewliyn E. Thompson. Normally the most cautious of diplomats. I found Thompson in an unsually discursive mood.

He was lounging comfortably in a swivel chair at his desk in the big ambassadorial office in the old Hapsburg military academy where the American Embassy is now housed, with his feet propped on an open desk drawer. I took a chair and said as an opener, "Well, where do we go from here?"

Thompson smiled with an expression of amused satisfaction.

"They seem to be shell-shocked in Washington and I haven't had any instructions so far at all.

Instead, I've cabled Dulies and proposed that he let me handle He swung his feet down and bulled open the big file drawer in his desk and pointed to it. "You see that," he said. "There is every position we've taken on every article of the Austrian weaty in the last three years. If I understand the Soviets correctly, when they make a strategic decision like this to go ahead and conclude a treaty, then they are ready to move and will not hold things up over tactical details. So I'm going back in and ask for everything we've asked for for the last three years." Thompson added, somewhat bluntly, that, "I'm not going to have the Austrians saddled with a bad treaty simply because they are now in a hurry when they can see light at the end of the tunnel."

The next three weeks were a rough time for Thompson, as he fought his own little diplomatic cold war with the Russians, watched by nervous allies and indignant Austrians and, in the end, even with growing unease in Washington that he might be demanding too many Soviet con-cessions. Meanwhile, the Austrian press was berating Thompson and the Americans, blaming Dulles for trying to prolong the cold war and being afraid to see American troops withdrawn from Austria. But Thompson kept his cool and stuck to his course. On one disputed treaty article after another, the Russians began to move. Two-way concessions, of course, helped move things along, but on fundamentals most of the conceding was one way. In the end, there were two or three central sticking points and Thompson flew to Paris to meet Dulles, who was there on a policy-making trip, to get final

Austria on demand after the into force. The Austrians were ready to give the inhuman privilege to the Kremin and the other Western newers were by now so nervous that they did not want to risk a last-minute deadlock.

At the meeting in Paris, Duller went around the table and the State Department advisors were unanimously but reluctantly for conceding. At the end, Thempson spoke. He told Dulles that he considered the Russi demand to be morelly indefensib and that it would be equally in moral for the United States accept. He said quietly but irruly that he believed the Russian would concede and he asked for instructions to go back to Vient and stand firm.

Position Approved

Dulles broaded and deodled the pad of yellow foolscap page which he always kept in from of him, and finally gave h grunting assent-Well, if yo think so, all right." Probable Thompson's appeal to Dulles sense of morality was the decision point. But as the meeting brei up, one of Thompson's eldest an closest friends in the Foreign Service took him aside and said

"Tommy, are you really sen on this one? Do you know he far our neck is out? Dulles really wants this treaty now and you're taking an awful chance if this

Thempson simply said that he realized the chance that he was taking, but he felt very strongly about that particular treaty article and he also felt that the Russians would give. He flew back to Vienna and informed h unhappy allies that he ha instructions to stand firm, and is they went. When they reached the disnet ed article, Thompson quietly be forcefully informed his Russia opposite that the United State had reviewed it carefully and insisted that it be dropped from the treaty. The Soviet high commissioner shuffled his pape and then looked up and said a most matter-of-factly. Soylet government is disposed accept the position of the Unite States."

Thompson later recounted that "it took all of my diplomate training not to show the immen relief which I felt, so I hastib shuffled my papers and thanks the Russians and suggested we move on to the next article under consideration."

The Thompson lesson and the Thompson thesis-that when the Russians have reached a strateg decision they do not let tactic decisions impede getting whithey want—was certainly strong borne in on the Americans wh negotiated the Berlin agreement This was why a seemingly west Allied hand could instead b turned into a strong one. The Russians wanted an agreemen and they were willing to pay

South's Schools Calm

Integration Tide -'Too Late Now'

By James T. Wooten

TLANTA (NYT) -- Most Southern children went back to school last week, an event traditionally accompanied by blic protest, frequent disruption and occasional violence. This ne, however, there was, relatively speaking, a notable lack of sistance, even in districts where children rode buses out of eir neighborhoods. Many of those who have watched the much tensions come and go shrugged, turned away and nounced it was finally all over

Theirs is a premature judgment, of course. There were isy exceptions to the rule of peace and quiet. A bomb ploded in a vacant school in Columbus, Ga.; a boycott took ape in West Palm Beach, Fla., angry parents took a few ildren to the wrong schools near Birmingham, Ala, black ungsters and white adults sculified in Wilmington, N. C., and ere were some arrests in Austin, Texas.

Moreover, several districts where there are signs of resistance ye not yet opened their doors, including Orlando and cksonville, Fia.; Nashville, Tenn.; Jackson, Miss., and Mobile,

Meanwhile, in the North, where most schools have not yet ned their doors for the fall term, there were some indicaons of mounting resistance to desegregation by busing. In ordiac, Mich., for example, 10 buses scheduled for use in a egregation plan were ripped apart by a dynamite blast.

Arithming groups were also making last-ditch and gener-junguecessful efforts through the courts. The Supreme mirt rejected 11th-hour appeals from antibusing groups counting to stay plans in Texas, San Francisco and Nashville. the Justice Warren E. Burger refused to grant a stay of a infor, something rare in a denial of a stay, the Chief Justice if that he is persuaded there has been a broad misinterpretaof the court's decisions on racial balance and busing. He irt correctly if they were ordering the busing of children in belief that the Court required racial balance in every school.

Fact of Southern Life

Still, the fact remains that wholesale integration, including e achieved by massive busing, is now a fact of Southern life. because it is, the days of stands in schoolhouse doors, of smal troops and venomous whites eyeing each other at the of some schoolyard, are probably just about over.

Even Gov. George C. Wallace was speaking to his State slature in Montgomery, Ala., in softer tones. He asked for antibusing law that would give every Alahama parent a legal. t to resist the assignment of children to any school on the "I believe every child in the state should go to .;chool of his choice, whether he be black or white," he said. But at week's end, Governor Wallace seemed about to up Ante again. A group of state legislators told the Montgomery ity Board of Education that the Governor was preparing for nwdown over desegregation this week. He plans to use troopers, they said to transport seven white girls from a minantly black elementary school—to which they had assigned under a plan approved by a Federal court—to a promently white school considerably farther from their s. The action would be taken at the request of the girls' its. And Governor Wallace himself said, "When any school al says everything is quiet, he's talking about student

Voices Are Muted

Elegwhere in the South, however, most of the official voices ined muted

n Mississippi, Gov. John Bell Williams, who up until this has been almost strident in his denunciations of integrated c schools, spoke not a word on the suject as the kids in tate, black and white, went back to school.

lown in Florida, in a summer commencement address, Gov. sen Askew asked University of Florida graduates to go home promote tranquillity in their communities, and he urged all ents of his state to accept the law and the Court's directives, if they included busing.

on the other Southern states, problems with school deseg-ion seemed so minimal that the governors did not feel elled to say anything at all—except here in Georgia where Jimmy Carter, touted mationally as one of the "new breed" gional politicians, urged parents to make their antibusing ments known in the hope that the Federal judiciary will native to the you popull.

Burger's Weighty Words

That may have been the most important event of the specially in the North where de facto residential segregamakes racial balance in the classroom possible only through were the words of Chief Justice Burger in his refusal ant a stay to Winston-Salem. More than a few school is above the Mason-Dixon Line breathed a sigh of relief in tope that the Chief Justice's counsel may save them from uture shock of big busing.

int in the South, most educators and political leaders 'e Mr. Burger's words will have little to do with public tion's tomorrows. "It's too late now," said William Self, intendent of the Charlotte, N.C., schools. "We've already

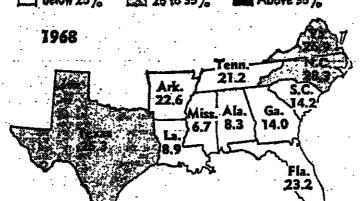

o have dozens of other districts across the South, and there have been and no doubt will be major problems, are expected to conform to the Court's directives and, as a t, bring about startling changes in the racial structure cir systems. t may be, however, that from a quantitative perspective, South has already reached or will reach this year the mum level of integration possible in an area once so ritualilly committed to racially separate schools. he only way the South could go further with integration rough new and massive busing. And that now seems unwith the antihusing forces given new strength by the s of Chief Justice Burger and President Nixon.

In the background was another grim inflation report. The Wholesale Price Index for August with nearly all the data collected before the freeze-rose strongly again in both industrial and food of one percent, both before and after adjustment for normal seasonal variation. Farm and food prices fell in August but much The result was a rise of 1.4 pervolatile portion of the index. The over-all wholesale price index was up seven-tenths of one percent, seasonally adjusted, largest rise in six months,

In addition, though it was not directly related to the inflation issue, unemployment for August increased from 5.8 to 6.1 percent of the labor force, indicating no pre-freeze progress on that front,

As for the post-freeze program, there was general agreement—though the government had not yet made a formal announce ment to this effect—that the freeze could not just be allowed to end with nothing to replace it. Yet the experiences in this and other countries have not been heartening regarding efforts to control for long the upward thrust of wages and prices by either compulsory or voluntary

One factor was working in favor of success. This is not a time of "excess demand" with massive buying pressures pulling up prices and threatening shortages. The classic pressures, on the contrary, are working toward lower or at least stable prices and wages. This should help.

Nevertheless, there were number of fundamental questions that would have to be answered, such as:

· Should the freeze be followed by a full-scale program of wage-price control, with the issuance of daily regulations on everything from the price of pickles to the wages of household The answer was an almost universal "no." No witness before Congress favored it. The President has long been appalled by the idea. Herbert Stein, a member of the Council of Economic Advisers and chairman of the task force that is planning for the new program, said that this was one alternative that the government "devoutly hopes" can be avoided. Full-fledged controls require a small army of bureaucrats and, even worse, it is argued, tend to erode the essential flexibility of the pricing system. a guide to more efficient production and allocation of labor. Controls halt the free market in its tracks.

What Happens After the 90 Days?

By Edwin L. Dale Jr. WASHINGTON- (NYT). - The government and a host of distinguished grandstand quarterbacks were fully engaged last week in the process of devising a means of holding back wages and prices when the present freeze ends in mid-November.

It could not yet be called a "debate." The government had not put forward a concrete proposal for "phase two" that could provide substance for a debate. In fact, last Thursday President Nixon postponed a meeting with labor and management scheduled for Sept. 21 because a proposal was not yet ready. But ideas were beginning to circulate, particularly as a result of hearings conducted by the Congressional emerging a surprising, if perhaps tentative, agreement that such authority should exist. Arthur M. Okun and Gardner Ackley, two former chairmen of the Council of Economic Advisers under the Democrats, both said there should be some kind of backup, statutory authority to halt or roll back specific price and wage increases, presumably mainly those of major practical or symbolic importance for the economy.

Maurice H. Stans, the Secretary of Commerce, reported that a group of top businessmen felt that way, and he agreed. Elsewhere in the government, officials seemed to be leaning that way. There was not much elaboration of the point, But evidently the feeling was that purely voluntary standards were likely to be violated and that the rollback club would make compliance much more likely.

• Should there be "guidelines" for appropriate wage and price behavior, backstopped with occasional use of the rollback

Mr. Okun was convinced there should be and he proposed a set of guidelines which would permit wage increases of a little more than 5 percent in the first year after the freeze and industrial price increase of 1 or 2 percent on the average.

Mr. Ackley was not certain but thought the idea had great merit, Paul W. McCracken, Mr. Nixon's chairman of the council, said the idea bad "attractions" but he is known to feel that there are great difficulties in promulgating acceptable guidelines or standards.

In the absence of such guidelines, those in charge of the new program presumably would simply select what they regarded as important and "flagrent" cases for investigation and possible rollback.

Should only prices and wages be covered, or should the program also include profits? Here there was some disagreement. George Meany, head of the AFL-CIO, has long held that profits should be included. Controlling profits directly is extremely difficult, but most additional profits can be taxed away through an "excess profits tax," which was used both in World War II and the Korean

Mr. Stans and Secretary of Labor James D. Hodgson both indicated that profits might have to be covered in some way. But Mr. Ackley and Mr. Okun-the liberals—were, ironically, firmly opposed to inclusion of profits. Mr. Ackley said an excess profits tax was "a lousy tax"-encouraging all sorts of corporate waste and inefficiency to keep profits down. Mr. Okun agreed. He said the tax would "encourage wasteful advertising, expense-account living and overfull employ-Authoritative White House officials disclosed at the end of last week that the President was opposed to an excess profits tax. This was done to dispel rumors set off by the Hodgneither man had explicitly backed the idea. The President was said to regard such an impost as a poor form of taxation that would be "counterproductive" in efforts to achieve greater business effi-

• How would a new, largely noncompulsory program be administered?

There was as yet no consensus, Mr. Meany was reported to favor a tripartite board with representatives from labor, business and the public. Mr. Ackley supported the idea of a board, but one made up of impartial distinguished private citizens only, appointed by the President but largely independent of White House influence.

Another possibility was administration by a government agency, as the Council of Eccnomic Advisers used to police the Kennedy-Johnson guidelines.

· What is the role of Congress?

At first, it may be very little on the wage-price section of the program, though Congress will have a decisive voice later. The present authority, under which the President imposed the freeze. runs out April 30. If there is to be any compulsory element in the new program, the law-as is, or amended under great pressure from various groups-will have to be extended. Meanwhile, there may be more hearings.

Consent Needed

fort are likely to depend upon the degree of cooperation of the public and, possibly above all, of organized labor.

Mr. Ackley, stating that a program can work only with the "consent," even if grudgingly given, of those involved, told Congress:

"In my view this consent can only be forthcoming through a widespread participation by all groups in our society - and particularly by the organizations of labor and business - in a process of recognizing quite explicitly the need for the program, in determining the broad features of its initial design, and, there-after, its modification and redesign."

President Nixon said much the same thing. He told an audience of dairy farmers that the "one great ingredient" in determining success or failure of his program "is the spirit of the American people." He said "nothing worthwhile can be won except through sacrifice and self-reliance, through discipline and pride."

Thus the biggest issue may simply be whether Americans are now ready to try being co-operative instead of combative. If they remain combative - not to say selfish - the chances of averting a resumption of inflation will not be very bright.

Once Again the Arabs Try To Glue Together a Union

CAIRO (NYT).—The phoenix of Arab unity re-emerged last week, somewhat cautiously, in the Federation of Arab Republics-loosely linking Egypt, Syria and Libya in a union aimed primarily against Israel, and devoid of the grand illusions of earlier unity efforts.

Recent Arab history is littered with unsuccessful federations and unions—Egypt and Syria, Egypt and Yemen, Jordan and Iraq, all in 1958: Egypt, Syria and Iraq in 1963; Egypt and Iraq in a Presidential Council in 1964. The Egypt-Syria union of 1958 was the most ambitious endeavor but it broke apart in 1961, largely because it ignored national sensitivities and proclaimed union as "one state, one flag, one army, one people." The greatly out-numbered Syrians rebelled against an inevitable tendency for Gamal Abdel Nasser and his fellow Egyptians to dominate the union.

Avoiding Previous Pitfall

The new federation seeks to avoid this pitfall. Each of the three countries whose populations voted last Thursday to join-and the Sudan which will join next year-retains its own sovereignty, seat in the United Nations, army and currency.

The federation will be headed by a council of the presidents, with unanimous voting required for action on critical issues such as a declaration of war. It will also have a federal assembly, court and ministers and a joint military command empowered to shift troops from one country to another, a crucial factor in quelling such crises as the recent rebellion in the Sudan. The federation's capital will be in Cairo and Egyptian President Anwar el Sadat is widely expected to become the first chairman of the council of presidents. But perhaps the federation will provide a more important platform for Libya's ambitious young Col. Moamer Qadhafi, who is expected to take his turn in the chairman's seat in a few more years.

Dutch Invite Non-Residents To Buy Euroguilder Bonds

By William Ellington

GENEVA Sept. 5 (AP-DJ).— The Netherlands has acted to encourage non-residents to buy Euroguilder bonds rather than domestic ones through introduction of a special market for bond purchases, the Dutch Na-tional Bank said in The Hague. Although details were not immediately available, sources in Amsterdam said Dutch authorities would require non-residents to buy domestic bonds only with the proceeds from domesticbonds sales by non-residents, in effect shielding the domestic capital market from further inflows of foreign funds. Euro-guilder bonds, which by definition are placed with non-residents, will not be included, sources said.

Such regulation would give a boost to Euroguilder underwrit-ing activity, which already shows signs of revival. This week, Slavenburg's Bank said it would offer 15-year bonds totaling 20 million guilders and bearing 8 percent interest. Nederlands Hoogovens en Staalfabrieken N.V. plans a 60 million-guilder issue, due 1986, with an 8 percent coupon. The two issues follow a recent 60 million-guilder, sevenyear offering by New Zealand. The Republic of South Africa is also planning to offer Euro-guilder bonds. The 7-year, 60 million-guilder issue is expected to bear 7.5 percent interest and be priced at 99.25. Underwriting activity in Euromarks has also revived. Commerzbank is managing a 100 million-mark, 15-year issue for Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. with an 8 percent coupon. The issue will be priced shortly before the Sept. 21 offering date.

Dresdner Bank is planning another 15-rear issue for Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd. Sources believe the issue will carry an 8 percent coupon and be priced

> In Switzerland, underwriting activity has been unprecedented, if private placements mostly with non-residents are included. Some Swiss bankers estimate that the volume in the past Eurobond issues by a wide margin, even if purely domestic issues were excluded. The basic reason for this is that the Swiss National Bank wants recent large capital inflows to be "lockinto medium and long-term commitments, a Swiss dealer says.

> Investment bankers say the outlook for underwriting in Eurodollars is bleak as long as currencies are floating and the dollar is likely to depreciate significantly in relation to other currencies. But some bankers still consider the odds favorable for a quick realignment rather than a long period of floating, despite pessimistic pronouncements by politicians and central bankers. "I think all parties will negotiate until a solution is agreed," a Zurich banker says. But even if a realignment of currencies is settled, some observers believe the exchange controls implemented during the dollar crisis will remain. Exchange controls will make busimuch more difficult and there were already signs that the secondary market was suffering

Sweeping Fiscal Policies Initiated by Washington $Add\ Imponderables\ to\ Assessing\ Economic\ View$

By Thomas E. Mullanev NEW YORK, Sept. 5 (NYT).— Ordinarly, the advent of Labor Day increases anxiety over the business and economic outlook for the final segment of the year. The current year, surely, is no exception, but the uncertainties have been heightened by the sweeping new economic policies suddenly instituted by Washington three weeks ago.

Among the many imponderables in the picture right now are these

• Will the three-month freeze on prices and wages be extended when its 90-day tenure runs out in mid-November? Or will it be replaced by some new mechanism with statutory teeth for controlling the inflationary spiral?

• How will Congress react to the President's expenditure proposals and tax incentives for business when it considers the program at its resumed session next

• Will consumers exhibit new confidence and expand their buying-increasing sales, production and, ultimately, the number of jobs-as the administration fervently hopes?

• Will corporate earnings eventually be brought under cellings through the imposition of an "excess profits" tax to assuage critics, particularly labor leaders, who feel the Nixon economic plan is weighted heavily in favor of business rather than the public?

• Can the United States regain its competitive edge in world trade as a result of the 10 percent import surcharge and the realignment of currency values that is now under way? Or will has been immediate, shocking and that program induce retaliatory measures abroad creating world-wide protectionism and inhibiting international trade? It is much too early to get & meaningful answer to any of those provocative questions and much too soon to discern many positive effects from the administration's daring economic ini-

foreign aspects of the Nixon program have already been rather dramatic and concrete.

Much of the mittal psychological reactions and resistance to the domestic aspects of the program have begun to wane and a waitand-see attitude is taking shape in business, labor and economic tiatives on the domestic front. However, the psychological impact

This was clearly reflected in markets this week, where some of the bloom has already begun to fade. Both the stock and bond markets settled back into more familiar, slower-paced patterns after two weeks of hectic activity and sharp price gains. The markets did, however, end the week on a strong note last Friday, A strong rally in last week's final session moved the stock market from a moderate loss to a slight net gain for the week in greatly reduced trading.

One prominent factor in the late rally was the assurance from a White House source that Presi dent Nixon had no intention of proposing or supporting an excess profits tax on business, despite recommendations that such a step be considered by some labor lead. ers. Democratic congressmen and even some members of his cabinet Turnover on the New York Stock Exchange slipped to 57 mil. lion shares for the pre-holiday week from 76 million the week before and 105.2 million two weeks

All the leading stock averages moved to slight gains, with the Dow Jones industrial index up 4.60 points to 912.75; the New York Times combined average rising 4.90 to 562.90, the Standard & Poor's combined gaining 021 to 100.69, and the stock exchange composite ahead by 0.14 to 55.66.

The over-the-counter market also showed a small improvement. The Nasdaq industrial price index rose 1.50 points to 111.57. Among the counter movers, Texfl rose 5, Winston Mills and Barclay Industries each added 2 while the Chemed Corp. and the Westchester Corp. each

North crowded the bidding by jumping to four clubs over West's opening, so South was deprived of the opportunity to show both his suits. This turned out to his advantage, since he landed in spades, a suit breaking threethree, instead of hearts, breaking five-one.

With four hands in view, it is easy to see how to defeat the contract. West can maneuver for a heart ruff, putting his partner in with a diamond lead at the second or third trick. However, West had a problem when he cashed the heart ace followed by the club see.

East had played the club three, which might or might not be a singleton. West did not know which minor suit to play at the third trick, and guessed wrong by playing a club in the hope that his partner would ruff. It is arguable whether East should play high-low in such a situation, knowing that South must also be short in the suit. It is important to have a partnership understanding on this point, and North-South, like most expert partnerships, had agreed to signal with the higher card of the doubleton.

Technically, one agreement is as good as the other. In this case, an agreement to play low would have been equally ambiguous. West would not have known who held the three. Notice that if South had held the eight-two, he would have made the right play by putting on the eight. After the play of the deuce, West would have known for sure that his partner held a singleton club. In such situations, South can give his opponents the maximum chance to misread the situation if he signals with a doubleton as he thinks East

There is a paradox here South needs to know how his opponents signal in this situation, and is entitled to ask. But if he asks, he gives the game away, betraying the fact that he has a choice of plays.

The only sure way for West know what to do arises if East hesitates before playing to the first trick. This shows a doubleton, but is highly unof a solar eclipse by a team of English scientists served to dramatize for a thunderstruck world what has been widely accounted and the most served to the s counted one of the most extraordinary intellectual feats in human history—Albert Einstein's postula-tion of the general theory of rel-ativity, whereby he proved that Sir Isaac Newton's world of mechanical absolutes was merely an illusion. Yet for all the wonder of Einstein's revelations, it is difficult to look back upon his career without feeling twinges of contempt for a world that elevated a theoretical physicist to the role of a messiah. For has it not been the sad lesson of the 20th century—was not Einstein's own career sufficient demonstration that to master the subtleties of time, space, and matter is not the same as comprehending the vagaries of human affairs? Looking back now, does it not seem absurd that the world beat a path to the absent-minded professor's door and thrust at him the roles of political leader, moral arbiter, and healer of the lame and the halt?

Einstein himself seems to have thought so, which partly explains why he cultivated the Einstein image of humble saint in baggy clothes. And his present biographer, an Englisman respected for his earlier books on J.B.S. Haldane, the Huxleys, and Sir Henry Tizard, seems also to think so; indeed he attributes to the phenomenon of Einstein's apotheosis responsibility for a tragic element in the great physicist's life.

And yet despite such reflections -despite the scorn one may now feel for the world's idolatry of Einstein, despite the many years that have passed since his rev-olutionary ideas first burst upon the world, despite the fact that we ought to know better-Einstein's charisma remains as ra-diant as ever. At least it does so in Clark's reconstruction of his

For how else is one to account for the appeal of this biography? How else explain why one plows willingly through 700 pages devoted to an abstract thinker whose ideas are still hard to grasp and whose conduct when he wasn't thinking sometimes bordered on the absurd? Einstein's enduring charisma must be the explanation.

Without it, Clark's account might easily have proved a bore. For he dwells excessively on trivia. He worries inordinately about Einstein's debts to earlier experiments. He devotes too much space to the politics of Einstein's institutional affiliations, his comings and goings to lecture and think. He tends to overindulge in the "were-it-not-for-this-incident - history- might-have-beenaltered" approach. He gives disproportionate attention to Ein-

More threatening to the son ness of his book: Clark is go of the very hero-worship of i stein for which he chides rabble. By dwelling so exten ly on Einstein's inconsistent by forcing into a tragic dimens the fact that Einstein ended days as a German with an rational hatred of German pacifist who had endorsed development of nuclear wea and an internationalist who ported Zionism-Clark m pumps gas into his story. the simple truth that seem emerge despite Clark's strain is that for all Einstein's ga as a theoretican, he had as m right to change his mind as next fellow.

But such criticisms among quibbling when measured ag the virtues of this biography: vivid portrayal of Einst growth from an obscure rebels had trouble getting pass grades and finding work to revered old man who seemed be kidding the world with saintliness; its elegant train of Einstein's theories (if one d not always grasp their det one is at least aware of the significance and is incident grateful for Clark's point such catch-phrases as "the fourth dimension," "the co of space" and "relativity" its were meant to be unders mathematically and not by me of common sense.)

Moreover, there is a truly gic dimension in Clark's trayal of how Einstein grade changed from the brash rebelupset the Newtonian applecan the conservative who stubber refused to accept a universe wa out cause and effect ("God wa not play dice with the work Einstein insisted to his dy day). And as for Clark's su handed building of the drama the moment when Sir Art Eddington, back from his st cessful expedition to mess light as it passed the sum down at a dinner of the Ro Astronomical Society and reta a parody of "The Rubsiya ("Oh leave the wise our meas to collate./One thing at it is certain, light has weight? thing is certain, and the rest bate-Light-rays, when near sun, do not go straight")—it i no other word for it—spine-ti ling.

Thus the wonder of Einste achievement is made to a fresh once again. And thus logic notwithstanding, an oth wise ordinary tale of human i libility achieves the stature Greek drama.

a 5. Roitimore T	Hale Train

By Russell Baker

IF you ask a man who works for you whether he has been stealing your mail and he says no, and you say, nevertheless he will have to take a lie-detector test, there is a good likelihood that you are going to hurt his feelings. This is the postsition the State Department has assumed in letting a number of its officers be thrown to the lie-detector in an

FBI investigation Baker to find who leaked some classified information to the newspapers, and one of the men interrogated while wired to the polygraph writes that his feelings were very hurt indeed. An excerpt from his letter follows: "I had just left a joint allarency briefing on the Bulway-sian problem, where we had had an excellent tour d'horizon of the entire Afro-Asian situation presented by the deputy to the assistant tour director, when I was sununoned to the office of the Assistant Secretary for Suppression of Leaks, Dam Bursts and Periodic Oozings.

"I knew at once what to expect. For days word had been fermenting on the diplomatic grapevine that White House was incensed about the leak of the highly-classified menu for the forthcoming state dinner the President was planning for the Abu of Upper Bicussia.

"As an expert on the deeprooted ancient cultural animosities of the three Bicussian states. I was only too aware that public disclosure that the Abu was to be served filet mignon with mushroom gravy might endanger the peace of the entire region, since gravy is the national emblem of Middle Bicussia and its consumption by an Upper Bicussian, with White House encouragement, might very well be considered a

"The Assistant Secretary was direct in his inquiry, and I was equally to the point. 'Mr. Sec-retary.' I stated. You have my word as a gentleman that I had nothing to do with the leak." "In that case, he said, 'you won't mind telling it to the lie-detector. "You may imagine my astonishment. I objected, in an extremely well-bred way of course. that I considered it beneath the department's dignity to refuse to accept the word of one of its officers who was regularly entrusted with the most sensitive tasks. The Assistant Secretary explained in a most diplomatic manner that while the department trusted me implicitly, it thought I might be lying. "I said that I regarded his response as insulting.

"He urged me not to be insulted. After I had been in diplomacy a little longer, he said. I would realize that the department thought that everybody whom it trusted implicitly might be lying. "I became extremely angry and made remarks which will doubt-less be leaked to the Under Secretary for Promotions next time my future is discussed. I said would be willing to take a liedetector test if the Secretary and the President would agree to be wired to lie-detectors during their next news conferences.

'Quit stalling.' the Assistant Secretary snarled, 'and come clean! You're the guy who leak-ed the gravy, aren't you?'

"That, as he knew it would, left me no alternative. I was tied to the machine, which probed me and notified the police that I wasn't lying this time. "No hard feelings," everybody said as I was sent away." The envelope in which the above letter arrived also contained the classified itinerary for the forthcoming American visit of Gen. Whoa Theath, the vice-president of the Kingdom of South Whupee, who, it appears, will spend most of his time conferring with Mafia leaders about techniques for increasing revenue from fixed horse

Western-Style Carnival Wows Russians

By Hedrick Smith MOSCOW, Sept. 5 (NYT) -In this land of dancing bears, exgymnasts and champion weightlifters, ordinary Russians came by the thousands for a Western-style fling at the international carnival in Gorky Park last week. Young people lined up for hun-dreds of yards, and some waited three and one-half hours, for just one brief joyride on a whirling blue West German roller coaster, Jetstar 2, and came off wobblylegged but happy. Other throngs jammed the banks of the Moscow River, bursting into laughter or exclamations of fear and surprise, as the roller-coaster cars rocketed around turns and the screams of joy-riders filled the air. The rock beat thumped loudly from speakers overhead. But there were no long hair, beards, jeans, miniskirts or hot pants, no garish costumes. Only a handful of women wore slacks, with none in shorts. Even sunglasses were a rarity.

"It's terrible," murmured a mother holding a small boy.

Teel Like a Bird'

"It's the greatest feeling," said Sasha Pavlushin, a smiling, welldressed 20-year-old Muscovite whose curly blond hair and cleancut face could have come straight out of Middle America. "When you hit the steep part, it's like free falling without a parachute, you feel like a bird."

In three weeks, Soviet officials estimate that more than two million people swarmed through more than 60 exhibits from 10 Western countries, including Italian go-carts, American bowling alleys and pinball machines. West German bumping cars and scores of other carousels and merry-gorounds, from England, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Finland and Sweden.

Although circuses have always been popular in Russia and Gorky Park has its own ferris wheel and a few joy rides, Soviet officials say there has never been anything like the sprawling. Coney Island-style "Attraktsion 71," as the Soviet Ministry of Culture named its international carnival. The show reflects increased Russian leisure and official interest in increasing recreation facilities. officials said.

"This is the first and biggest and best we have ever had," said

Associated Press. RUSSIAN ROLLETTE-Soviet soldiers on roller coaster.

George M. Bolshakov, head of information for the carnival. So enthusiastic were Soviet officials that Tass, the Soviet press agency, announced that the ministry had purchased most of the exhibits, estimated privately by officials to cost about $3 million.

"The Russians went wild over this stuff," remarked Richard Brown, president of Amrex, Inc., an American concern that sold $500,000 worth of carnival equipment to the Soviet Union, Gesturing toward the older, wooden Soviet-made park equipment, he added, "The youngsters went for anything that was modern."

For pollution-conscious Americans another surprise, typical of Moscow, was the cleanliness of the park. Despite the huge crowds, there was almost no litter. And in the long lines there was almost no pushing and shoving, no children darting ahead.

Avoiding the Bump

The crowds were patient and polite. Even when the Russians drove the bumping cars, they avoided the crashes that so delight American children. But the Russians, like Americans, ignored the instructions over the loudspeakers to fasten their safety belts. They patiently endured seemingly endless lines for a quick burst of fun. Most of the men seemed dressed more for a funeral than a carnival. Dark, somber, conservative suits, even worn without ties were everywhere. The matrons were in plain cotton dresses and youngsters in modest garb.

However subdued the crowds. there was no mistaking their enthusiasm for the foreign amusements.

"I like the Italian go-carts the best," confided a moustached army officer, and he raced off to keep up with friends headed for that pavillion. Six joking teenage boys, as they left the roller coaster, asked a foreigner which country had invented the roller coaster.

Misha Grepinkov, a leatherjacketed seventh grader who had relished a ride in the bumping cars, pronounced them his favor-

"That's the best because you can drive, them yourself," he said. His younger brother, Vitya, was less positive. "I didn't get to drive," he explained.

At the two bowling alleys set up by the Brunswick Corporation, Miss Yekaterina A. Furtseva, the minister of culture, knocked down eight pins with her first ball. Most ordinary Russians had to settle for a tour of the alleys but a few official delegations got to bowl.

"They're all fascinated with the automatic pin-setters," said Arthur K. Serbo, a Brunswick spokesman, Tass reported that the Soviet Union had decided to buy the two alleys. Those and other exhibitions will go on tour in other Soviet cities now that Attraktsion 71 has closed its run in Moscow.
